GIFT FOR OLDER TECHIES
Nancy Gravley, Computing with Bifocals

Satechi LED Desk Lamp $59.99 available at Amazon or from the Satechi website. Read a review by Nancy Gravley at:
http://www.macobserver.com/tmo/review/satechi-led-desk-lamp-cool-glarefree-adjustable-light

The flexible neck is adjustable to the right, left and up and down. The base is touch sensitive to turn on the light with a finger; to adjust brightness, users hold down their finger until desire light level is achieved. The base includes a USB port that is powerful enough to charge smartphones, tablets, music players, cameras and more even while the lamp is off. The lifespan of the lamp is over 40,000 hours, says Satechi. The lamp consumes 8 watts of power, 80% less than a typical fluorescent light. LEDs provide steady, flicker-free lighting.

IN 2014, iWORK IS CALLED "PRODUCTIVITY SUITE"

The new Productivity suite for 2014, formerly known as iWork, no longer bears that designation. Rather, for 2014 updates, they are identified as versions, i.e., Keynote is now version 6.5, Pages 5.5, and numbers 3.5.

Arstechnica reports:

> Like last year, Apple is giving away the iWork apps to anyone who purchases a new Mac or iOS device, but those with older devices will still have to pay. We also found them preinstalled on a new iPhone 6, something Apple began doing this year on the higher-capacity models. While, like last year, an existing OS X iWork '09 is left untouched, the iWork '13 apps are replaced.

Update: iWork '14 is only free for those who got (or are qualified to get) iWork '13 for free.
The 2014 version of the suite creates files that cannot be opened by previous versions. On the other hand, version 2014 can open files created by iWork '09 and newer, some Microsoft Office, and plain text files (.RTF files are left in the dust). If you have any files made by older versions of iWork, or if you still have AppleWorks files, be sure to convert them with Pages '09 while you still can.
Saving files in version 2014 uses the single file system again (as opposed to a package that held multiple files and folders but looks like a single file in the Finder). The single file system now compresses all the files that are part of a document into an actual single file. However, when saving to iCloud, the package format is used. Also noted is that saving a large movie, e.g., 600MB, you are automatically asked whether to switch to the package format, because "Keynote works best when you save large presentations as packages."

There is the option of saving your files in the package format by selecting "Advanced" in the File menu, and changing to "Change File Type."
